These men are typical Wall street creatures. You see them hustling here and there, buttonholing men and whis pering in their ears. They are tireless.

They know everybody who is likely to take a little flier. Sometimes as many as a score or more of them used to go to Russell Sage every day and ask him what he would charge for options on various stocks and securities. Having got Sage's terms, they scoured the streets, professing to give tips, and in the course of a week would bring in many customers to Sage. Their usual commission was one-eighth of 1 per cent., and the smartest of them could make from ter to twenty dollars a day.

They brought Sage a great deal of business first and last. But these men have been sad eyed enough since the explosion. This part of Sage's business life is ended as much as though he had been killed on that day, and it is a serious question whether he will ever resume it. This has thrown these scouts and commission agents upon their up-pers. — New York Cor. Philadelphia Press.

He Locates Oil Wells in His Dreams Butler county has an "oil smeller" Some months ago Cunningham & Co. were drilling a well on the farm of Ira Stanffer. One night while the well was drilling Casper Keichner, a crippled jeweler of Zelienople, dreamed that the well was dry, and in the same vision he saw a spot on the farm of John Shriver, near the Stauffer farm, where a well was flowing 1,000 barrels per day. Keichner related his dream to Cunham & Co., but a smile was all he a first class duster.
